Loch Goil is a picturesque arm of the sea, about six miles long springing from the western side of Loch Long. It is closely hemmed in by dark and severe-looking hills, those on the eastern side being facetiously known as "Argyll's Bowling Green." Garrick Castle is an oblong keep, projecting into the lake, which was built in the early part of the 15th century and destroyed by the men of Athole in 1685.
